

Fee Lee Wong was among the first Chinese immigrants to arrive in the Black Hills with the gold rush of 1876. He remained there for the next twenty-five years, becoming a prominent merchant and community leader in Deadwood's Chinatown.

Born in Canton, China, in 1846, Wong immigrated to the United States in 1870 and settled in Deadwood soon after the Black Hills were opened to non-Indian settlers. Many Chinese who came to the region sought their fortunes in gold mining, laundries, restaurants, and other trades. Wong found his niche as the owner of the Wing Tsue Emporium. Located at 566 Main Street in the heart of Deadwood's Chinatown, the store stocked Oriental groceries, herbs, chinaware, and novelties. Wong returned to China to marry Hal Shek on 10 October 1882. The couple moved back to Deadwood in 1883, and their first son was born the following year. Over the next twelve years, they would have three more sons and four daughters.

Early on 13 February 1885, a fire consumed Wong's emporium, which was also reputed to be an opium den and gambling house, and nine other buildings in Chinatown. The Black Hills Daily Times for 13 February billed the disaster "A Blaze from Which Little Harm and Vast Good Resulted." Part of the community's hostility arose from the fact that Chinese laborers were willing to work hard for low pay, undercutting non-Chinese workers. In addition, community leaders considered Deadwood's Chinese prostitutes and opium dens to be a public health threat. In order to discourage the businesses from rebuilding, the Deadwood city council convened an emergency meeting to assess the costs of improving Main Street through Chinatown. Wong and other Chinese businessmen recognized that the expense could ruin their livelihoods and offered a compromise. In return for helping to fund moderate improvements, they agreed to build respectable houses on the west side of Main Street while keeping the opium dens and brothels on the east side.

Fee Lee Wong looked after the needs of other Chinese people throughout his years in the Black Hills, raising funds for New Year's festivals and paying for the funerals of the destitute. Wong moved his family back to China in 1902 and joined them in 1919. They settled in the British colony of Hong Kong, where he died in 1921 at the age of seventy-five.

by Christopher Leatherman

Dakota Images

Fee Lee Wong

Copyright of South Dakota History is the property of South Dakota State Historical Society and its content may not be copied or emailed to multiple sites or posted to a listserv without the copyright holder's express written permission. However, users may print, download, or email articles for individual use.

All illustrations in this issue are property of the South Dakota State Historical Society, State Archives Collection, except for those on the following pages: p. 193, from Frederick Whittaker, A Complete Life of Gen. George A. Custer (New York: Sheldon & Co., 1876); p. 200, from Philip H. Sheridan, Personal Memoirs of P. H. Sheridan, Vol. 2 (New York: Charles L. Webster & Co., 1888); p. 208, from Hamlin Garland, Ulysses S. Grant: His Life and Character (New York: Macmillan Co., 1920); pp. 217–19, from George W. Kingsbury, History of Dakota Territory, and George Martin Smith, South Dakota: Its History and Its People, Vol. 1 (Chicago: S. J. Clarke Publishing Co.), 1915; pp. 242, 246, from Edwin A. Curley, Guide to the Black Hills, (1877; facsimile ed., Mitchell, S.Dak.: Dakota Wesleyan University Press, 1973); pp. 247–48, 260, from Scribner's Monthly 13 (Apr. 1877); p. 266, from James D. McLaird, Mitchell, S.Dak.; pp. 293, 301, 303, 307, 311, from Paul Horsted, Custer, S.Dak.; p. 313, from Minnesota Historical Society, St. Paul, Minn.